

my picks*TIN SHED
WILD BUNCH EDEN VALLEY
RIESLING 2006*93 points

At its best, like this, Eden Valley rizza is more austere, dry and stony than its floral Clare cousins, and needs years. Wild Bunch reeks of tight lemon acidity, with that acrid flinty waftage of a chain gang crackin' rocks. The palate's in the same quarry, with totally uncompromising reflections of the schist and granite below its little vineyard. It leaves the tongue as dry as dust, hanging out for food. Perfect with yellow pork or carp curry. Or a decade in the dungeon.

TIN SHED
THREE VINES MSG
2003*94 points

Seductive and intense, this wine renders all into whom I tip it unto a deep swoon. Normally reluctant noses fall back into their glasses. Earthy peat and lignite are the base tones; gloriously sweet, exotic black fruits from plants that don't exist fill the top register. But that's the mataro - which the Froggists now call mourvedre - doing that; there's dux shiraz and grenache below it. It's mellow, but'll stay lively for years under that reliable screw. Mmmushroomms.

